Excerpts from the Resilient Communities Final Projects

- Teaching students outside of AP classes
  - “...youth on a college track, such as those taking AP courses or attending school in more affluent districts, are more likely to be exposed to high-quality civic education practices in public schools, including being taught about voting” (Kiesa, Levine 3)
  - Those not in AP classes don’t have the interest or the opportunity

- FINDINGS

  American citizens, young adults in particular:
  - Don’t feel knowledgeable enough to contribute their vote
  - Don’t know how to register and vote
  - Don’t know who to vote for
  - Don’t feel like their vote matters

- High school IDs
  - “...many states have made both registration and the act of voting less convenient or...quite difficult for some eligible young voters. States have implemented photo ID requirements with restrictive lists of acceptable identification...these changes are associated with lower youth turnout.” (CIRCLE)
  - Current Minnesota law- College IDs
  - Driver’s license in rural areas not as popular

- Findings
  - Misinformation/Lack of information is common
  - Social media is a primary source of information for many voters
  - Civic education needs to be addressed in schools
  - Lack of diversity in politics discourages people from voting
  - Young people feel ignored by politicians, our voices are not being heard
